One Way In No Way Out

The sign on the rusty fence read: No Trespassing! Violators will be shot and shot again if they live. Lake Lenape Amusement Park management. Maybe Billy and Sam would have chosen another way to spend their day instead of sneaking into the abandoned amusement park if they knew why the park was closed. Owners of the park had built it over a Lenape Indian burial ground. The park closed with a reputation of being a place where children were killed when all the rides, games and swimming pools promised a day of fun and excitement.

Peering through the a hole in the broken fence, Billy and Sam saw rust crusted carnival rides covered with overgrown vines, fading exotic signs and empty food stands. Surely they would find treasures left behind when the park closed. The forest jungle cast a shadow over the decaying building of the House of Mirrors and Horrors. What a wonderful place to make a clubhouse. But what of the watchman and his posted warning if they were caught?

Yes, the House of Mirrors provided more than a boy's club house and mirror images making little boys big and lean or short and fat. In this house there were special mirrors, mirrors showing good and evil, young and old, and mirrors to a world of carnival of spirits where dead children play. There was one way into the House of Mirrors and Horrors, but no way out for Billy and Sam.
