The greatest conspiracy of the 20th Century is revealed by chance. The discovery of a devastating method of mind-control leads to a desperate race through the history of cinema. A portrait of a disintegrating mind, confusing reality with cinema as the world cracks apart.

The apparent accidental death of an unknown man leads Larry Went to a startling conclusion. A notebook, containing a series of baffling clues, seems to confirm Larry's hunch that the dead man was a famous European filmmaker and intellectual. With the support of a cast of disparate friends, Larry begins to unravel a mystery that reveals a deadly battle between revolutionary and reactionary forces that has infected 20th century history and continues to affect and control contemporary society.

Dark Windows is a work of fiction: A conspiracy thriller, an examination of the place of cinema in the 21st century, the story of one man's struggle with reality and history.

Neil Coombs, author of "Studying Surrealist & Fantasy Cinema" (Auteur, 2007) has published his first novel "Dark Windows". The book; set in Wales, London, Switzerland, Spain and Surrey; builds on his knowledge of film gained through 13 years as a college lecturer, weaving the history of cinema into the narrative of a satirical conspiracy thriller.
