A Big Hit Jack Logan

Just got home from another boring day at work? Growing more and more concerned that you'll be there until you die? Then flick on the mind numbing violence that is the local news report! That's what Donny Driver does each day; watch the rich and famous being mangled by bullets, baseballs bat, anvils, and maybe a shark. It all makes for great television. But life doesn't let anyone sit around forever. A knock on the door and a slight misunderstanding sends Donny out into the night, forced to commit the mindful violence and destruction that he would have just DVR'd.

A Big Hit takes Donny through the highlights of urban life; from seedy night clubs and massage parlors to concert halls and the fanciest restaurant in town. But dark shadows lurk in even the brightest shining city and those dark shadows are filled with Donny's new coworkers, all veterans eager to see Donny cut down and willing to do the job. But messing with the new guy isn't always fun.

Doing's just as addictive as watching; and soon Donny finds himself thriving in his former world of entertainment. He might be better than those on TV. He could also be worse.

Written by Jack Logan; who hopes more than anything this novel will keep him from getting up before noon ever again.
