Many years before the Government told us how many pieces of fruit to eat per day, and long before there were safety rails in toilets, there was a time when people could smoke in pubs and poor children got diphtheria. This era was called 'The Olden Days' and it was a time when pirates could earn an honest living killing and robbing everybody on the high seas. Some midget pirates with smaller ships plied their trade on the lower seas but this book is not about those people because nobody was scared of them and it would be boring. Oh no. This book is page after page of danger and hyperbole, as deep green Ocean Captain Long John Silver and young Jim Hawkins set off aboard The Monkey's Hole on a secret mission for the Admiralty of King George of England.

Since his first journey to Treasure Island young Jim, the youngest Midshipman in the Royal Blue Navy of the Regal King of England, has become somewhat more cynical so he opens up a mental treasure chest of expletives to curse his luck at every opportunity. Silver is now a respectable Sea Captain, loyal to Crown and Country, but seems to attract every execrable mission that the intelligence boffins in the Admiralty can dream up.
