“Are we supposed to have sex with these guys?” I muttered to my friend Rachel, who had turned me on to this job.

Rachel giggled. “I think it is sort of a ‘don’t ask, don’t tell policy.’ We are definitely not required to, but it is most certainly not frowned upon. Anything to make them feel like royalty, I suppose.”

Their job entails things like: grocery shopping, buying clothes, designated driving, etc. The pay is good, but there is a dark side not listed in the job description.

Shortly after feelings develop for Latrelle McKay, star quarterback and Heisman favorite, life changes dramatically for Olivia. His popularity conflicts with her introverted ways. And his immaturity dispels her sanity every time he does not call. But, oh my, is the sex good.

Loving A Star - Book 2:

We pick up right where we left off, in the heat of turmoil. Latrelle and Olivia's relationship is spiraling down faster than his public perception. Stealing shoes is not the last of his negative media attention.

Olivia's man problems are not the only thing keeping her awake at night. Now, she has her job at stake, feeling like she failed the promise made to Coach Bub to keep Latrelle out of trouble.

A relationship with another woman is bad enough, but when Olivia finds out that his mistress is carrying a child it is too much to bare.

Is this just some star struck girl, leaching onto Latrelle's fame?

Are her accusations true?
